The Fisherman's Struggle

Before the sun begins to rise,
He sails beneath the changing skies.
With tired hands and a hopeful heart,
He faces the sea and makes his start.

The waves may roar, the winds may blow,
Yet still he sails where few would go.
No promise waits beneath the sea,
Only hope for his family.

Some days he returns with an empty net,
But never with his courage set.
He carries his worries, pain, and fear,
Yet smiles when his loved ones are near.

The sea takes hours, the sea takes years,
It knows his struggles, knows his tears.
While others sleep in peaceful beds,
He fights the waves with dreams ahead.

He asks for no medal, fame, or praise,
He simply works through stormy days.
For every meal upon our plate,
A fisherman faces the sea and fate.

So let us remember, when we eat,
The unseen hands behind our feast.
For he is more than a man at sea —
He is a symbol of strength and bravery.
